Not illustrated. 1843 Excerpt: .three courses, nothing can be more uninteresting and monotonous than the sejour of Cadiz, notwithstanding its fair and cheerful aspect. The public walks are admirable, and are three in number, --the Alameda, the Plaza de la Constitucion (formerly the Plaza de San Antonio), and the Plaza de Mina. The former of these is the most recherche, and by far the most agreeable, as its situation near the sea-shore commanding a full view of that ever-moving picture, the bay, with its shipping, and the town of Puerto de Santa Maria on the opposite side, renders it gay and animated in the extreme; and the breezes wafted from the ocean temper the climate so delightfully, that, even in the most intensely hot weather, the refreshment of cool air is to be found there. The Alameda is divided into an upper and lower walk, having stone benches and narrow plantations of flowering shrubs on either side of them; but neither the fountains nor the em bowering trees that embellished the Alamedas of Granada are here to be seen. At about seven in the evening all the world assemble on the upper walk, the ladies at first occupying the benches, the gentlemen pacing up and down in the centre, and sunning themselves in the bright eyes of the seated beauties: but very soon these latter grow tired of their repose; the benches are abandoned, and the walk then becomes so densely thronged with promenaders of both sexes, that it is...
