Cornell University Press, United States, 2009. Hardback. Book Condition: New. 2nd Revised edition. 236 x 163 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book. Quarterly Review of Biology The variety, power, and pleasure of modern natural history shines brightly in this book. Intrigued by the porcupines after he discovered them gnawing at the plywood of his Catskills cabin, the biologist Uldis Roze has spent twenty-five years tracking and studying this solitary animal. His firsthand observations are a revelation; throughout the second edition of his classic work on the subject, he shows how much can be learned by following a porcupine in the woods. Quill...
